

Read this BEFORE you let the police in

- ► The police do not have the right to enter your room without your consent unless they: see something ILLEGAL in PLAIN VIEW; have a SEARCH WARRANT; or are in HOT PURSUIT of a suspect.
- If you do not consent, in order to perform a search, the officer MUST either release you or detain you and attempt to obtain a warrant. The fact that you refuse to consent doesn't give the officer grounds to obtain a warrant.
- ▶ The best way to speak with an officer is outside your room. Before leaving your room, you may politely say: "I'm coming out, I do not consent to you entering my room." Exit your room and shut the door behind you. After this, speak politely with the officer, and stay calm. Wait until he/she has left the hall, and then go back inside your room.
- You should politely say: "I do not consent to a search of my person, belongings, room, or vehicle. I retain my Fourth Amendment rights and all other rights under the United States Constitution. I will say nothing until my attorney is present."
- ▶ If you do consent, the officer CAN and WILL conduct the search without a warrant. The police have the right to seize anything in plain sight. If the officer finds any contraband, you will be arrested. If you do not consent, a warrant can be issued to the police by the court. A warrant limits police to searching areas where the specified contraband might reasonably be located.
- If you are arrested, do not resist arrest, even if you believe your rights have been violated.
- ▶ Don't ever touch the police officer. Don't argue, be polite but firm. Don't threaten to file a complaint. You don't have to tell the officer anything without a lawyer, except you must state your correct name and address.
- It is very important that you seek legal advice if you feel your rights have been violated because each case should be examined individually. If your rights may have been violated, contact Student Legal Services at 333-9053.
